The Italian's career ended when he was suspended for doping in 2003 and the sport's obsessive community followed the case with breathless fascination, and at times relentless venom. The case was one of cycling's most famous doping scandals and though it took more than a decade to come to a conclusion, it's been recounted over and over in countless books, documentaries and web essays. ADVERTISEMENT Thanks for watching! But the end result of that obsessive scrutiny was all the more shocking because of the manner in which it came about. In short, the case resulted in a retrial being ordered when a scientist at UCI, which governs cycling, changed his previous testimony on the reliability of the scientific evidence. After the retrial began, the Spanish-born Italian, whose ambition is to be a long-distance runner, imploded in spectacular fashion, becoming beset with panic attacks and physical collapses. ADVERTISEMENT Thanks for watching! ADVERTISEMENT Thanks for watching! Pantani's case was one of several doping cases heard by the Court of Arbitration for Sport following a complaint from a fellow rider, Jan Ullrich, in July 2002. Ullrich's complaint was about the UCI's former president, Hein Verbruggen, and other senior officials who'd been investigated in 1999 and 2000 but acquitted of all charges. The case was decided in favor of Verbruggen, who resigned as president in 2003. Verbruggen's acquittal occurred despite testimony from two UCI members that they'd given him substantial sums for lobbying efforts in exchange for a positive ruling from the UCI. In 1998, the UCI agreed to a sum of €1,500,000 (worth $2.1 million at the time) to help pay a legal bill incurred by Verbru f678ea9f9e
